PEABODY TO CHICAGO AGENTS.

URGES THEM TO HELP MUTUAL ADMINISTRATION TICKET.

ises of Big Business "Next Year" if Trouble Makers Are Discouraged Ohio Peticyholders Issue Stinging Pamphlet-Move to Split Oppos became known yesterday that President Peabody of the Mutual Life Insurance Company was on a trip to the West last week and while in Chicago addressed the agents there, urging them to work for the coces of the administration ticket. Mr. Peabody's trip was ostensibly one of in spection and consultation regarding the company's business. He told the agents that the most unpleasant duty he had had to perform was to reduce expenses. He declared that the agents were the "innocent parties" in the troubles that had beset the pany and that they had had to bear more than their full share of the burden.

Mr. Peabody declared that the axe had been plied with care but fearlessly and that the policy of the company henceforth would be to conserve the agents' interests as well as to watch carefully over the expenditures of the company. He said that this year the company would write about $20,000,000 of new business, but that next year, when the election of trustees is over and the company's affairs are settled he expects the new business will amount to fully $150,000,000. This brought Mr. Peabody to the point of saying that he wanted the administration ticket elected in December by as large a majority as possible, and he wanted the agents to see need of hard work in that direction. He said that if the administration ticket should win by only a small margin it would be "an encouragement to every malcontent and self-seeker to make trouble hereafter."

At the Mutual's offices yesterday no com ment was made on Mr. Peabody's trip nor would any statement be made as to its significance. When asked if it was Mr. Peabody's plan to visit the various large cities to urge the agents of the company to turn in and work hard for the administration ticket, it was said that no one had authority to comment on such a matter. President Peabody would say nothing to the reporters.

There was a meeting of the trustees of the Mutual in the afternoon, but Emory McClintock, the vice-president, said it related solely to routine business. There was also a regular monthly meeting of the trustees of the New York Life, but only routine business came up.

The international policyholders' com-mittee is preparing to hold a meeting of its executive committee on Wednesday next at the Waldorf-Astoria and of the full committee on Thursday at the same place. It is expected that every member of the full committee will be present at Thursday's meeting. The meetings will consider the names of the anti-administra-consider the names of the anti-administration tickets that are to be put up for the leading companies. Much progress has been made in making selections for the tickets, and it may be that the lists will be completed and made public next week. The Ohio Life policyholders' association has issued a pamphlet entitled "W ho's Who in the New York Life." It contains a sketch of the disclosures before the Armstrong committee in regard to the management of the New York Life and it prints a table showing "where millions of policyholders' money has gone." The table shows that $6,097,700 of the company's funds was wasted and spent improperly and beneath the figures is printed: "And the surface has just been scratched." There are more than 40,000 members of the Ohio association and the pamphlet is being sent not only to them, but to the New York Life policyholders generally.

to them, but to the New York Life policy-holders generally.

There was some talk yesterday about an independent policyholders' ticket, repre-senting those who did not approve Mr. Untermyer's association with the inter-national movement. Nothing definite about the movement became known, but it was regarded generally as a move to divide the opposition forces and was really in the interests of the administration ticket. The name of ex-Judge Dittenhoefer was mentioned as counsel in the movement. Judge Dittenhoefer declined to make any statement whatever concerning the move

QUAKERS WED IN HOSPITAL. Quaint Ceremony for the Benefit of

When he was hurt a week ago, by a motor car, Frederick A. Swan asked at the firs opportunity whether he would be well at Flower Hospital told him that with a broken leg he certainly would not. But when Miss Helen Wood, in Dorchester heard what the surgeon had said, she wrote back to Swan, and it was arranged that they should be married at the appointed time in spite of everything. Whereupon Swan cheered up and began to mend, so that he was a presentable bridegroom vesterday, though he could not walk.

This made no difference, for bride and oridegroom are Quakers. Quakers have marriage ceremony of their own, in which the couple remain seated. This was the ceremony with which the two were united resterday afternoon in the staff room at Flower Hospital.

The hospital was pleasantly excited. The nurses must have told the patients something about it, for everybody in the place got to know about it, The surgeon in attendance had a message for the bridegroom yesterday afternoon: "There's a plane one of the boys has in his room, and if you say, the staff will all lay old and move it in. We thought you night want the wedding march played, you know." The bridegroom had to explain that planos did not fit the old Quaker custom.

The staff room was unrecognizable to those who frequent it, as it was empty save for rows of chairs, garlanded with brightened with the colors of greens, brightened with the colors of flowers. Drab shades were half down, too, and gave the room a meetinglike quiet Nurses stopped at the door to look in, just before the people came, and they noticed that the smell of roses drove away the narcotic ether smell that clings to the

The bridegroom was carried into the improvised meeting house before any guests arrived. He sat and waited with the bride and her father. Some carriages pulled up at the hospital door, and out of them came the wedding guests. Some were women in gray kirtles, without flounce were women in gray kirtles, without flounce or trimming, and some were ancients, well shaven, and wearing broad hats very level over thin long gray hair. They all walked in quite as if they were entering the usual meeting house. Up the stairs they went, and into the transformed room, and took their seats after quiet greetings, men on one side and women on the other.

When all had come, and the last hospital employee had hurried in and wedged himself in the crowd in the rear, there was a silence. It was a silence of curiosity; the uninitiated wanted to know what was to come next. No one rose; no one spoke.

come next. No one rose; no one spoke And men saw that the Friends were sitting still, each with his hand over his eyes, wait-still, each with his hand over his eyes, waiting for the spirit to move.

Some minutes passed in unbroken quiet.

Mr. Swan then unegvered his face and spoke to his bride. "Helen, will thee be my wedded wife, and take me for thy husband?" He said little more, and after a second silence of waiting the bride answered "I do take of waiting, the bride answered "I do take thee, Frederick," and when she had finished speaking they were married.

Some one prayed, and then James Wood, an elder of the Friends, arose and spoke, wishing Providence to bless the union of the man and wife. Then all left their seats. Without changing their quiet manner the Quakers opened boxes of refreshments. loe cream and lemonade and cake were passed around. Friendly Quaker women saw that the nurses and doctors had their share. Quite soberly every one enjoyed it. According to the way of the persuasion there was an abundance of refreshments. The people who allow themselves no vanities seem to indulge in the one luxury of plenty. There was threefold as much ice cream as all the company could eat, notwithstanding that the Friends are fond of ice cream. The remaining store was sent up to the patients. Perhaps the Quakers had thought of that before.

BOARDWALK GAMBLER NABBED. How He Didn't Fool Graybeard, Who Was an Old Telegraph Operator.

James Gormeley, for whose arrest a warrant was issued last week by the police of Atlantic City on a charge of grand larceny, was arraigned before Magistrate Steinert in the Tombs court yesterday by Detective Sergeants John Turley and George H. Griffin. The charge against Gormeley was made by Alexander J. Miller of Atlantic City, who charged him with conducting a bucket shop, getting $150 of his money and of causing him to lose $800 more.

Miller said that Gormeley and a man named Sheehan, under the firm name of Gormeley & Sheehan, had conducted an alleged brokerage business in the steel pier block in Atlantic City. He gave them an order to buy some shares of National Lead, put up $150 as margin and lost it and $800 profits, as the stock went up. Miller says he got wise to the character of the business the men were conducting about two weeks ago, when a man described by him as "a gray haired old chap" entered heir office. The elderly customer gave n an order and put up $600.

Gormeley, Miller says, went to a telegraph instrument and pretended that he was ending in the order for the customer, who suddenly asked him if he had bought the

"Why, yes; I just now sent your orde in by wire," replied Gormeley.

"Well, I like your nerve, but you are a damned liar. I've been a telegraph operator twenty years and I know that you have done nothing of the sort," replied the man with the gray whiskers. Then, according to Miller, the old man gave Gormeley just ten minutes to return his money and Gormeley, Miller says, handed back the Gormeley, Miller says, handed back the $600..

That made Miller anxious about his own little account and he asked Gormeley to settle, but got none of his money back. Then he secured the warrant, only to find the next day that the firm had closed shop and that the principals had left Atlantic City. He figured out that they would probably come to this city and with County Officer James Macready he came here and with the Central Office men ran down Gormeley.

Gormeley was held in $1,000 bail to await the arrival of extradition papers.

BLAST INJURES TWO.

Blasters Disappear After Shower of Rocks Smash Many Windows Uptown.

Many windows were broken and two persons injured by rocks from a blast which prematurely set off yesterday in West 145th street near. Seventh avenue, where a gang of men are excavating for a new building. The report of the blast, heard all over the neighborhood, was fol-lowed by a shower of rooks and small tones. Half the rear windows in the stones. Half the rear windows in the houses along 144th street were smashed and one rock landed on the top of an elevated train.

Six-year-old Camelli Kornreich, who lives on the top floor of 238 West 144th street, was struck in the right eye by a rock weighing nearly five pounds and may lose the sight. The rock crashed through one of the windows. Mrs. James Thompson of 233 West 144th street was hit on the right leg by a rock. Several apartments were badly damaged.

When Paliceman Hermann of the West 125th street station got to the place where the blast was set off all the workmen had disappeared. George Brown, a contractor, of 613 West 145th street, has charge of the job. When the Bureau of Combustibles learned from the police that the contracter could not be found the blasting permit on the work we's revoked.

RETRACTS M'CARREN CHARGES

WRS. DIXON TAKES BACK ALL SHE SAID OF THE SENATOR.

At First She Reiterates That He Is the Pather of Her Child, but Finally Says She is Willing to Say He Isn't -Declares That She Must Have Been Crazy.

Mrs. Mary A. Dixon, who recently instituted an action to recover $200,000 damages against Senator Patrick H. McCarren, harging him with deceiving her and also alleging that he was the father of her twoyear-old boy, changed her tactics yester-day and made a retraction of everything had said about the Senator. She still living at 82 Lenox road, Flatbush, and in an interview said she wanted to take back everything she had said about the Senator, and to convince others that he meant just what she said she wrote: "Mrs. Dixon desires to make a full re-traction of all that she has said against Senator McCarren. Mrs. Dixon was then pressed to tell just what she meant by the retraction. She was asked if she meant that Senator McCaren was not the father of the child.

"Why should I put that in my state ment?" she said. "The Senator himsel wouldn't like to have me repudiate him as the boy's father. He has never denied the paternity before. Why should he be Subsequently Mrs. Dixon said that the paternity of the child could also be included in the retraction.

"I am willing to say," she added, "that the Senator is not the father of the child."

Mrs. Dixon declined to say what had caused her to make the charges against the caused her to make the charges against the Senator.

"I don't mind saying," she said, "that those whose words I listened to were never as good friends to me as the Senator has been. But I she 'n't tell their names. I am fully determined on that."

Mrs. Dixon was then asked how she could reconcile the fact that she had made the charges against the Senator and now repudiated them. Her friend, Miss Leslie, helped her out by suggesting that she was out of her head when she made the charges.

"Yes," added Mrs. Dixon, "I guess I was crazy when I made them."

Samuel S. Whitehouse, counsel for Senator McCarren, said subsequently that he believed the wording of the retraction covered everything that she had charged against the Senator, and indicated, he intimated, that she would now withdraw the suit. He also said that the existence of Mrs. Dixon's husband had fully destroyed the alleged cause for action.

Owing to the retraction of Mrs. Dixon it may be that her husband, Dr. Dixon of Manhattan, will not appear before the referee to-day, as Mr. Whitehouse said Mis. Dixon's counsel had asked for a week's postponement. He understood also that Dr. Dixon was away on a fishing trip.

BOOKER WASHINGTON ON CRIME Negro Educator Condemns Lynching and the Causes That Lead to It.

ATLANTA, Aug. 29.-In an address before the National Negro Business League. Booker Washington to-day said:

"On the negro's part we have a duty. Our leaders should see to it that the criminal negro is gotten rid of. I have no hesitation in saying that one of the elements in our present situation that give me most concern is the large number of crimes that are committed by members of our race. The crime of lynching everywhere should be condemned, and those who commit crimes of any nature should be condemned "In this connection let us bear in mind hat every man, white or black, who takes the law into his hands is insulting the executive, judicial and law making bodies of the State.

"Let us consider the classes of negroes that do not commit crime and are seldom charged with crime. They are those who own their homes; who have a regular occupation. I think I would be safe in saying that no graduate of Clark University, Atlanta Baptist College, Atlanta University, Morris Brown College or Spelversity, Morris Brown College or Spelversity. ran Seminary has been arrested for any crime in Atlanta in the last twelve months.

In this we have a strong demonstration in favor of education for all classes of citizens. The only safety for both races of citizens. The only safety for both races is education.

"Which is the class that is guilty, as a rule, of crime? They are the loafers, the drunkards and gamblers, men who glide from one community to another without interest in any one spot. We cannot be too strong or too frank in discussing the harm that the committing of crime is doing our race. Let us speak out; let us do our part, and then let us call upon the whites to do their part."

LONG LEGGED BIRD TRAGEDY.

It Lit on a Lady's Chimney and a Child-Told Her It Was a Stork.

Residents of the vicinity of Columbus Circle have taken up a new sport. About five hundred gathered near the Columbus monument yesterday aftenoon to watch, pursue and shoot at a bird long as to legs and neck and beak, slight as to body and of steel gray color. The stranger sailed in the park, and made for the monument He circled Columbus a couple of times and then alighted on the discoverer's cap.

"Look at the crane!" exclaimed a passer. "Pipe de stork!" shouted a small boy. "A great blue heron!" ejaculated a sobo lastic looking person.

The heron or whatever it was looked a few moments at the rapidly increasing crowd. Then it flapped its wings and plunged off into space, and floated down

It is five flights of stairs and a ladder from basement to roof. Just as Mrs. Gillespie had opened the scuttle and stuck her head out she heard a shot and ducked. No other shots followed, so she took courage and climbed out on the roof. There lay the heron, its neck bent under it, gasping.

Using her apron as a stretcher, Mrs. Gillespie carried the big bird downstairs to the office of a physician in the building. The doctor was out, but if he had been in it wouldn't have made any difference, as the bird soon stiffened out and died. Its neck had been broken.

Bicycle Policeman Quilty of the traffic squad heard the shot from the Circle. He found a lot of buckshot on the sidewalk in front of the Vermont, said to have been fired by boys from the windows of the West Side Y. M. C. A., across Fifty-seventh street. But no trace could be found of the man who had fired the shot that had killed the heron if it was a heron. if it was a heron.

BRIERLEY STARTS A SUIT.

sewark's Mayoralty Candidate Tries to Stop a Payment to Lackawanna Hallroad.

Joshua Brierley, who is an independent andidate for the Democratic nomination for Mayor of Newark, with an idea of running for that office anyhow if the local party machine refuses to consider his candidacy or give him what he thinks is a square deal, secured from Vice-Chancellor Pitney at Morristown yesterday an order upon the city of Newark and the Lackawanna Railroad Company to show cause why an injunction should not be granted to restrain the city from paying the sum of $150,000 to the company.

The application was made by Herbert Boggs and Otto G. Horster, counsel for Mr. Brierley, The payment the Mayoralty aspirant seeks to enjoin is the final one on a contract entered into between the city and the company in 1801, whereby the city agreed to pay $600,000 of the cost of removing the Lackawanna's fracks from grade crossing in the city. It was estimated by the company that this work would cost about $2,700,000, including the cost of adding a third track on the elevated structure about $2,700,000, including the cost of adding a third track on the elevated structure and for the building of new passenger stations and coal pockets. It was believed that the basis of net cost to the city was to be 25 per cent. of the total cost. It has since been disclosed that no such agreement really existed and that instead of Newark bearing 25 per cent. of the actual cost, its share under the conditions of the contract amounted to about twice that much.

The city has already paid $450,000. It is

The city has already paid $150,000. It is about ready to make the final payment. Mr. Brierley takes the ground that there is no statutory authority for the city to make payments to the company of any part of the cost of the change of grade, and that even if such authority were conferred by statute it would be invalid because it would be in violation of the nineteenth and twentieth paragraphs of the Constitution of New Jersey, which prohibit municipalities from donating land or appropriating money to or for the use of any corporation, society or association whatsoever. The rule is returnable at Newark on September 11.

Mr. Brierlev said that he made this move, not as a candidate for Mayor, but as a private citizen and taxpayer. He saw that the grade crossings in Jersey City, Elizabeth, Summit and New Brunswick were eliminated without any cost to the municipalities, whereas by the action of the Newark officials the people of that city have been The city has already paid $150,000. Wanamaker Advertizing As the Simplified Spelling Board Would Write It

THE change does not mean a revolution, as many of our good friends imagine. The Board is not possest of any wilful matice against the niceties of good form, Many of the "300 words" have been used in the listed style for a generation, by practically all writers-i. e., candor, instead of candour, licorice, instead of liquorice, check instead of checque. The Wanamaker advertizing, for years, has been using center, gage, program, woolen, tenor, deposit, and many more.

And further, Wanamaker Advertising has always been written in the limited vocabulary of simple, direct statement. More than half of the "three hundred" words are never used in Wanamaker advertizing. The new forms begin their usefulness when exquisite fabrics make, us speak of "crusht and teazeled cobwebs kist by dew." Or "counters heapt with snowy linens, whipt and washt to whitest luster by skilful hands among the heather blooms."

Until such time as we begin to gloze our talks with apothems (Macaulay would have spelled it apophthegms), or catalog in rime the mixt and multitudinous merchandize of which we seek to be dispossest, our new advertizing vocabulary must be comprest into a meager score of words stript of fantom and medieval consonants.

Dry goods dulness must still be dipt in the somber dyes of primeval orthographic forms, until the Simplified Spelling Board has more thoroly ript and lopt offending superfluousness from the every-day words we need, which are still propt up in their woful transgression by slavish usage.

Further than this we shall not go.
